This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PREFACE.

THE author hopes that this small Vocabulary of the Kashmíri Language, while interesting to the comparative philologist, will be found useful to the English traveller in Kashmir.

The materials composing this little work were collected by the author while discharging his duties as a Medical Missionary to the inhabitants of the valley.

Several short lists of Kashmíri words have appeared from time to time in the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, but they are more interesting to the philologist than practically useful to the traveller, from there being no corresponding lists of English words with their equivalents in Kashmíri.

Scattered up and down in the book will be found some original information respecting Kashmir and its people.

As Kashmíri is a colloquial language, it was deemed advisable to insert the different forms of the same word met with in conversation.

The work is doubtless far from being complete, and probably contains not a few errors, from the fact, that the language, as now spoken, has not been reduced to writing.

But if this work should serve as a stepping stone to something more complete and accurate, the author will regard himself as well repaid for his labour.

Búíí, n. f. the Chunár or oriental plane-tree (Platanus orientalis), a tree of great beauty in the valley. It was introduced by the Mussulman conquerors, and is now very abundant. It is the finest tree I have seen. The wood is said to be good for building purposes, but there is a prohibition against cutting it. It is used for papier maché boxes. It is rather soft, but well suited for furniture, doors, and turnery. This tree is not indigenous to the valley, but was introduced by the Mussulmans from the west. It never bears seeds in Kashmir, in which it is always propagated by cuttings. Its bark is sometimes subject to a morbid hypertrophy, which has many, if not all the properties of cork.

Vigne, the English traveller, saw a Chunar tree at Thana, and believes that it is no where found nearer the plains of India. The same traveller says, 'near Avin in

- Persia, is the largest chenar, or platanus orientalis tree I ever saw, measuring about sixty-four feet in circumference, and having a copious stream flowing from beneath its roots.' I have not seen one with a greater girth than thirty-seven feet.

Ch.

Ch: is to be regarded as one letter, and to be pronounced as in English.

Cháh, n. m. a well.

Cháhi, n. f. tea.

Chái, n. f. tea.

Two kinds of tea find their way into the market of Kashmir. These are called Suratí and Sabz. The Suratí tea is like English tea. The Sabz tea, on the other hand, is the famous brick tea which reaches Kashmir by way of Ladak. The Suratí tea reaches Kashmir from Ladak and the Panjab.

There are two ways of preparing tea in Kashmir. The first is called Mogul Chái. For every tola of tea five cups of water are poured upon it in the Bhogun or tea pot. It is then boiled for half an hour, when more cold water is added, along with condiments and sugar, after which it is boiled for half an hour more. Milk is then added. It is now ready for drinking. The colour is reddish.

The second mode of preparing tea is called Shiri

Chái. The tea is placed in the tea pot with a little soda and water and boiled for half an hour. Milk, salt, and butter are then added, after which it is boiled for another half hour, when it is ready for drinking. Tea imported from China via L'hassa is a state monopoly.

Gaḍ, n. m. fortress.

Gád, n. m. fish. There are several varieties of fish found in Kashmir. viz., chharú gád, gurau gád, and ropiṭh gád. There is also the háj gád, the scales of which are large and silvery and spotless. The shoulders are broad, the body gradually tapering towards the tail. Next is the Soj Gád, which is covered with small golden coloured scales. It is rather a shapeless fish: there is little difference in size between the shoulders and the tail. Lastly, there is the Khrunt Gád, which is very like the last named species, only that the scales are silvery and spotless.

In 1868 the prohibition to catch fish, which had existed for twelve years prior to that date, was removed by the native government. This proved a great boon to the poor Kashmiris, who are afflicted with most abject poverty.

Both Hindus and Mussulmans eat fish.

Gáří, n. f. the Singhara, or water-chesnut, as found in the lakes of Kashmir. It ripens in the month of October. During that and the succeeding months the people extract it in enormous quantities. The nut is dried and then formed into a flour or meal, of which cakes are made. These the Kashmírís eat with salt, ghee, and flesh. The Pandits, or Hindu portion of the native population of the valley, are in the habit of fasting two days in every month, and during these two days they eat nothing but a little flour made out of the gáří, or water-chesnut, which flour, when cooked, is called gáryiwugara or phalhár, which latter word is the term applied to this simple dish by the Pandits themselves. To the people living round the Wulur Lake, by far the most extensive of the Kashmir lakes, the gáří, or water-chesnut, is a substitute for rice. The nut is stored away in the people's houses, and when cooked, gets the name of āṭiraz.

Kad, n. m. size, stature.

Kadal, n. m. bridge. The bridges spanning the Jhelum in Kashmir are of a peculiar construction. Piles formed of the deodar, or Himalayan cedar, are driven into the bed of the river, enclosing an oblong space, but wedge-shaped, to the current of water, and truncated at the lower end.

The wedge-shaped portion is then filled with huge stones, which serve as a sort of breakwater. On the oblong spaces are laid layers of deodar trunks, which are placed alternately at right angles to one another, and gradually increase in length towards the top of the wood pile or pier, so that the space between two adjacent piers is greatly diminished at the top. Trunks of deodar are then made to span the spaces between the wooden piers, and thus the bridge is formed. Even the broad Jhelum is spanned in this fashion. And although the frequent floods of the valley greatly test these wooden bridges, they are remarkably strong, and stand the repeated severe tests well.

Sometimes, however, it is destitute of the wicker work, and then it is called Manan. As the dress of the Kashmírí is of a loose fashion, the Kángri can be placed in immediate contact with the skin of the abdomen and thighs, where in many cases cancer (Epithelioma) is in process of time generated. Probably the Kashmírís learned the use of the Kángri from the Italians. in the retinue of the Mogul Emperors who were in the habit of visiting Kashmir.

Kashmír, n. f. Kashmír, which is both the name of the valley, and of Srínagar the capital. This name, Kashmír, is derived from Kashaf, the drainer of the valley, and már, a place.

Kashmir is called by the inhabitants of Little Tibet Khacheyul, and the natives are called Khachepa. The people of Gulghit call Kashmír Kashir. It has been roughly calculated that the plains of Kashmir, including the Karewas, comprise an area of at least 650 square miles, while on the surrounding mountains there is another area of 150 of pasture land.

The following story respecting the desiccation of the valley of Kashmir is now current in the country:—

Long, long ago, the country called Kashmir was an extensive lake, whose name was Sahtísar. A numerous population dwelt on the surrounding mountains. In process of time the beautiful waters of lake Sahtísar became infested by a terrible monster, called Zaldeo, which first destroyed all the fish in the lake, and then emerging from its placid waters, began to attack and devour the inhabitants of the mountains. In great consternation, they fled from their happy homes, and sought safety among the fastnesses of the mountains. In their retreat they came upon the abode of a Ríshí, or holy man, whose name was Kashaf. They told him their sad story. He heard their doleful account about the awful monster and his murderous doings. So great was the sanctity of this Ríshí, that God had given him power to work miracles. Accompanied by a great crowd of fugitives, the Ríshí directed his steps to the north-west end of the Wulur lake, and here he struck the ground violently with his trident. The earth opened, and in course of time, the whole waters of the Lake Sahtísar disappeared, and again reappeared near to the Krishan Ganga. In consequence of the draining of the lake, the monster, Zaldeo, perished, to the great joy and safety of the previously terrified mountaineers, and the valley was called Kashafmar, the place or country of Kashaf, in honour of the Ríshí.

A line drawn from Bandedipúr through the Wulur lake to Baramula divides the valley into two portions. The part to the north of the line is called Kamráj, or Kamráz, and the portion to the south of the line is named Miráj, or Miráz. It has been conjectured that Kamráj is derived from Kama Ráj, the territory of Kama, the god of love, and Miráj from Maya Ráj, the territory of his mother Maya, or Lakshmi, the wife of Vishnu.

The southern aspect of the range of mountains bounding Kashmir to the north, is bare when compared with the northern face of the southern range, which is richly wooded. The fruit grown on the southern side of the valley is superior to that grown on the north. In the months of April and May, spring weather prevails. The wind is pleasant, the sky is clear, and the leaves come out. The land is prepared for rice. The months of June and July are the hottest of the year. In July, the temperature outside in the shade is sometimes as high as 94°, Farenheit. In the months of June and July, mulberries, cherries, plums, and cucumbers are in their season. Wheat, barley, oats, and the different kinds of pulse ripen, and are reaped. In the months of August and September, rice ripens, and is reaped. Apples, pears, peaches, grapes, and quinces come to maturity in these months. The leaves now get seared. In the months of October and November the climate is pleasant and bracing. Saffron is gathered in October. Wheat, barley, and oats are sown in October and November. The cold is severe in the months of December and January. Snow sometimes falls in the valley, and the river Jhelum and shallow parts of the lakes are frozen. Vigne knows of no granite in the valley. The trade of Kashmir is falling off greatly, and this is caused mainly by the tyranny and exorbitant exactions of the Diwáns, who, besides being officials, are the chief traders or merchants of the valley. To those parts of Kashmir to which there is no water communication, goods are carried on the backs either of men or donkeys. In the valley there are several very fine temple-ruins.

The peculiarities of the architecture of these ruins are the following: gable with pediment of high pitch, arch trefoil, roof pyramidal. Probably Hindu or Asiatic architects had copied the Roman style of architecture, which they had seen in Syria and Egypt, modifying it of course, to please the Eastern taste. The chief temple-ruins are to be seen at Mártaṅd, Wentipúr, Pa-yech, Pándretton, Takht-i-Sulimán, Zojibal, Paṭan, Baramula, and in the Baramula Pass.

Kashmírí, n. m. a proper name. Kashun (kujhláná), v. t. to scratch; kúsh, kashán, kushmut, kashih.

Kāshur, n. m. the Kashmírí language. The Kashmírí language differs considerably in different parts of the valley.

Kashmírí is a pracrit or derivative of the Sanscrit language. It has been said that out of 100 Kashmírí words, 25 will be found to be Sanscrit, 40 Persian, 15 Hindustání, 10 Arabic, and 10 Tibetan, Turki, &c. The original letters of the Kashmírí alphabet are called Sháradah Achhar, and the following is the story given in Kashmir as to their introduction into the valley. There lived about two thousand years ago, in the city of Ujjain, in the province of the same name, a person whose name was Bikramájít, or Vikramadat, whose brother was king in that city and province. This brother's wife was a woman of bad character. She wished Bikramájít to cohabit with her; and because he stoutly and persistently refused, she fabricated a story against him, and prevailed upon her husband to expel his own brother from his territories. Bikramájít, thus driven from house and home, and accompanied by a few companions, began his travels. The exiles at last reached Kashmir. One of the little company was called Sháradah Nandan, who taught the inhabitants of Kashmir how to write the letters, which have ever since been called after him. There is a remarkable similarity between the Sanscrit and the ancient Kashmírí letters. The books written in the ancient charracter and language are unintelligible to the Hindus of the valley, except to a very few of the sacerdotal class among them. It is said that Thumí Sambhota, in the first half of the 7th century of our era, introduced the Kashmírí characters into Tibet. These characters remain unchanged to this day. See "Cunningham's Ladak."

Kāshur, n. m. a Kashmírí, or a male native of Kashmir. The Kashmírí has been called the Neapolitan of the East. The features of the Kashmírís are Jewish in character. And, apropos of this, it is very remarkable that the old temples of Kashmir bear a strong resemblance in plan to the Temple of Jerusalem. The chief features of the Kashmírí character are timidity, cowardice, laziness, gaity, mendacity, faithlessness, dexterity, inventiveness, and good mental powers.

Kõt grows on the mountains around Kashmir at a minimum elevation of 7000 feet above the sea. It is mature in September. It belongs to the Cynaracephalæ, a suborder of the Asteraceæ, of the family Compositæ. It is a perennial plant, the stem and leaves dying yearly down to the root stock. It is supposed to be the same as the ancient Costus. It is a fragrant root. The native government monopolizes it, and compels each Kashmiree living near to the habitats of this root to collect about 200 lbs. of it. It is all brought to Srínagar, whence it is exported to the Punjab. It thereafter finds its way to Bombay, and after that to China, where it is said the Chinese burn it in their temples for its fragrant odour. The people receive from the Government two rupees chilkí, for every Kharwár weight which they collect. It grows abundantly on the hills of Kashmir. It is very abundant on the hill of Gangabal, and on the hill behind the Shálimár gardens. Under Guláb Singh, each village had to dig up eight Kharwárs weight of Kõt, in return for which they received as much rice. This arrangement is said to have given satisfaction to the people. Kõt is used in Kashmir as an application to ulcers, a hair-wash, a remedy in Cholera, a preserver of cloth against the ravages of moths and other vermin, a fumigatory, and by the native hakíms, as an expectorant. There are said to be four varieties: (1) Kõt, (2) Drankhar, (3) Poshkar, (4) Kór.

The general plan of a Kashmir house is as follows. First there is a ground floor, in which are two chambers, with the small hall of the house. The second floor contains three rooms, and the floor under the roof usually consists of one long chamber, where the household spend the summer months.

Kine are often housed in the ground floor.

The wood of which houses are built are deodar, káyur, and songul. The woods of the poplar and plane are used by the poor, but they are far from being durable. No one is allowed to cut down a mulberry tree, or a plane tree, without permission from the native Government. The materials of which houses in Kashmir are built are, stones for a foundation, wood for the frame work, bricks and mortar to fill up the divisions of the frame work, and earth and the liber of the birch tree, called Bójpathar, for the roof, which is slanting. At times, however, instead of the fine inner bark or liber of the birch, a reed called tshai is used. In Baramula, Shupujon and Tsrár, the roofs are made simply of thick boards of wood nailed firmly, on account of the very strong winds to which these places are exposed. The reed called Tshai is found on the roofs of the houses in Srinagar, Sopór, and the adjacent villages, because they are near to the Dal, Wulur, and Anchár Lakes, where the reed grows abundantly. In some villages, the houses are thatched with straw.

In some of the houses there are fire-places, but generally they are without. The smoke finds its way out by the doors and windows. Fires are used only for cooking purposes. Wood is the fuel generally burned, sometimes cow dung, baked into cakes with straw, is also burned.

Pámpúr, n. m. the chief town of the Véhi pargana. Its population is perhaps about 10,000. In the neighbourhood of Pámpúr are the famous saffron fields. The town is said to have been built by the ancient king Pádamadat, after whom it was originally called Pádama-púr. The word is also said to be derived from padma, lotus, and púr, a city. The limestone strata of the Karewah, on which Pámpúr is built, are very remarkable. In some places they rise to a height of thirty and forty feet, close to the river. The saffron fields are said to cover an area whose circumference is from ten to twelve miles. The soil is said to be the richest in the valley. The roots of the crocus sativus are planted in June, and the saffron is picked in October. Saffron is extensively used in cookery and dyeing. A large proportion of the saffron is exported to Yarkand.

At the foot of a mountain five miles from Pámpúr is a slightly warm spring, whose waters are impregnated with sulphuretted hydrogen, and the rock from which it issues is composed of limestone.
